Find your 禅 in Fukui Zen

Fukui Prefecture is home to many temples, and among them you'll find temples of the Soto and Rinzai sects. These sects belong to what is known as Zen Buddhism, which incorporates zazen seated meditation into its religious practices.

Zazen is not beholden to any expectations or desires; it instead focuses on calming the mind and simply sitting.

There are a number of temples within Fukui where you can try zazen for yourself and experience Zen culture firsthand.

The temple Steve Jobs dreamed of studying at Eiheiji Temple

Established in 1244 by Dogen Zenji as the headquarters of the Soto sect of Buddhism. In the center of Eiheiji Temple, you'll find over 70 large and small structures that still remain around the temple's seven main buildings, where even today some 180 or so unsui, or Buddhist monks, practice their severe religious austerities starting early each morning at Japan's largest Zen Buddhist training site. In addition to trying zazen seated meditation, visitors can also stay overnight or even for a multiple-day intensive zazen session. This overnight stay provides a taste of the Zen monk lifestyle, including Shojin-ryori Buddhist Cuisine.

Final Resting place of the lord of the former Fukui Domain Daizenzenji Temple

This Rinzai sect temple was built in 1658, and was known as the family temple of the lords of the Fukui Domain during the feudal era. Today, it is preserved in the same condition as it was at the time. On the western side of the temple grounds, there is an iris garden famous for the beauty of the 10,000 flowers that bloom there in early summer.

Traces of the Samurai

From the end of the 15th century to the end of the 16th century, Japan entered what was known as the "Warring States" era, as battles were fought all across Japan.

Fukui was no exception: the remains of a castle town belonging to powerful samurai can be found here, and Japan's oldest castle tower can still be seen today in its original state. In Fukui, the Warring States era lives on in subtle ways.

Japan's only warring states-era castle town ruins

Ichijodani Asakura Clan Ruins

The Warring States-era warlords, the Asakura clan, ruled this area from 1471 to 1574; the remains of their castle town can still be seen today. These remains have been designated a special historic site, a site of special scenic beauty, and an important cultural property.

The restored town scenery of samurai residences and townhouses was reconstructed using the foundation stones and stone fences just as they were found underground on the site. Visitors can also try on the types of samurai armor and helmets or kimonos that were worn during the Warring States era (¥500 per person). At the nearby Ichijodani Asakura Family Site Museum, visitors can see some 500 items that were excavated here, such as ceramics and metal items, and many of the items on display are nationally registered as important cultural properties.

The oldest castle tower in Japan

Maruoka Castle

Built in 1576, Maruoka Castle is the oldest original castle tower still standing in Japan, leading it to be nationally designated as an important cultural property. Also known as the "Castle of the Mist." When the 400 or so cherry trees surrounding it come into bloom in spring, the castle practically "floats" fantastically on the blossoms.

A port town that flourished in the age of the Kitamae ship trade

Mikuni-Minato machi

Located right next to Mikuni Port, Mikuni-Minato machi flourished for centuries as the port of call for the Kitamae ships that would travel to destinations like Hokkaido or Osaka. With its latticed townhouses and families that trace back to the wealthy merchants of the day, it's easy to feel the liveliness of the town in its heyday even today.

This key point along the Mackerel Highway

Kumagawa-juku Historic Post Town

The road through Wakasa, the southern half of Fukui where Kumagawa-juku Historic Post Town is located, was once used to provide the then-capital city of Kyoto with a wide variety of seafood, earning it the nickname of the "Mackerel Highway." Kumagawa-juku Historic Post Town thrived as a post town, and even today, the town features old-fashioned buildings like guard houses, and the old irrigation canal. The area was nationally selected as an important preservation district of historic buildings.

JAPAN HERITAGE

Wakasa Province: A Cultural Heritage Linking the Sea to the Ancient Capital

The "Mackerel Highway" and the Wakasa region around it developed its culture through the foods and festivals brought here from Kyoto via the highway. In April of 2015, the area was registered as the very first Japan Heritage site, providing official recognition of the area's storied historic charm.

How to Ride

Buses & Trains

BUSES (Fukutetsu Buses, Keifuku Buses, and Community Buses)

Getting on

Get on at the rear door.

If a bus has doors in the front and the rear, use the rear door to get on.

For standard transit buses...

Take a numbered ticket from the machine by the rear door when you get on. Standard transit buses fares vary by distance traveled. The number on your ticket shows where you boarded the bus, so be sure to take one when you get on.

Getting off

Press the button to request a stop.

When you're riding the bus, each stop will be announced when it's coming up next. If you want to get off, press one of the buttons by the windows after the stop you want is announced.

Get off at the front door.

If a bus has doors in the front and the rear, use the front door to get off.

Payment

For standard transit buses...

Pay when you get off.

Fares vary by where you get on and off. The front of the bus has a board that shows the fares, so pay the amount shown for the number that matches the number on your ticket. Put your ticket and your fare payment in cash into the fare collection machine next to the driver when you get off (the fare collection machine doesn't give change, so if you don't have exact change, be sure to use the change machine located inside the bus).

Both types of bus are cash-only. Prepaid IC transit cards cannot be used.

For Community Buses...

Pay when you get on.

Community Bus fares vary by bus, but they all have flat fares for their entire route. As a result, riders pay when getting on, into the fare collection machine on the bus.

TRAINS (Echizen Railway & Fukui Railway)

Getting on

At manned stations...

Buy a ticket at the window.

Go to the ticket window at the station and buy a ticket to your destination.

At unmanned stations...

Take a ticket from the machine on the train when you get on.

Your ticket shows where you boarded the train, so be sure to take one when you get on.

When riding Echizen Railway trains, most trains running during the daytime will have attendants on board. You can pay your train fare to the attendant.

Getting off

At manned stations...

Pay any unpaid fares at the ticket gate.

At manned stations, you can get off the train using any of the doors. Give your prepaid ticket or your boarding ticket and fare to the ticket gate attendant.

At unmanned stations...

Pay any unpaid fares to the conductor.

At unmanned stations, only the front door of the train will open. Give your prepaid ticket or your boarding ticket and fare directly to the conductor when you get off.
